

The Liberal Democrats have the best record on human rights of any of the political parties. A concern for the rights of individuals and minority groups is at the heart of liberalism. That commitment is reflected in our manifesto, which is easily available on line if you search Liberal Democrat Manifesto 2017.

In it we commit to:

- The protection of the rights of current EU citizens living in the UK and UK citizens living in European Union countries as part of our fight against a hard Brexit
- Oppose any attempt to withdraw from the European Convention on Human Rights or abolish or water down the Human Rights Act
- Introduce a digital bill of rights that protects people's powers over their own information, supports individuals over large corporations, and preserves the neutrality of the internet.

I hope that is helpful and would encourage you to read our manifesto, especially the section Defend rights, promote justice and equalities which deals with these issues.
